Re: Collective monograph on humanities.

Monograph's target subject-matter:

The monograph's concept is based on philosophical study of the paradigm of modernism and postmodernism within various dimensions of modern interdisciplinary philosophical discourse. Thus, the contribution will cover the following issues:

- internal contradictions of modernism as a worldview, technology of thinking and social praxis;
- explanations of modernism and postmodernism in the light of Eastern and Western cultures;
- variations of modernism and modernization: Ukrainian society in the context of global processes;
- reactualization of modern and postmodern concepts of individual and society (historical and philosophical component);
- sociocultural globalization, transformations of scientific knowledge and the postmodern paradigm in contemporary philosophical thought;
- the discourse of postmodernism: particularities of narrative strategies;
- postmodern trends in philosophy and culture;
- worldview and sociocultural transformations of postmodernism.

Authors are invited to prepare materials meeting the above issues. The monograph's concept encourages the analytical activity of authors on studying modernism and postmodernism. According to its subject, research can deal with historical and philosophical aspects, in the panorama of time, and from the position of any branch of philosophical knowledge. In particular, the historical-philosophical insight will allow analyzing and making philosophical reflection the research subject at the theoretical level, and immersion in the socio-cultural situation – implementing the practical component of the research. The proposed logic will allow the authors to study the world in detail through the prism of modernism in its formation against the background of premodernity and postmodernity both in their history and in the actual present. These and other research aspects may highlight such axiological practical dimensions:

- 1) methodological will make the monograph a source of strengthening and deepening knowledge in specific branches of philosophical science;
- 2) hermeneutic may be implemented through immersion into classical and non-classical discourses and hence makes it possible to revise the ontological foundations of the language, the scope of the word, and the problems of hermeneutics, which are re-actualized toward the philosophical discourse of today;

3) existential, which is formed thanks to the disclosure of the complex and ambiguous nature of views on modernism and postmodernism from the standpoint of their social function in the philosophical and cultural traditions of the East and the West.

Please pay attention to the interdisciplinary nature of the research methodology, which should rely on various areas of scientific humanities: cultural studies, history, anthropology, linguistics, sociology, social studies of technology, etc. Therefore, authors can apply various research methods: comparative, structural, critical, analytical, interpretation methods, methods of empirical research, theoretical research, general logical methods of scientific research, as well as structural-functional, probabilistic methods, modeling, formalization, etc.
